£1.10 No.16 June 1990

Journal Journal

MODEL

LARISSA
The first Russian Model to work in the UK!

GAVIN'S - 25 years after!

GLAMOURSCENE Take Three Girls!

WIN a Membership at BLONDES!

WILHELMINA New York

Kids in Focus: KAMERAKIDS

CoverModel: CHELCI at ENERGY

Photograph: Kleinsorg & Apelbaum

Our Cover Girl

International fashion model
Chelci has worked in Milan,
New York and Germany. Last year, after a touch of the blues, she retired at the grand old age of seventeen, and up until the end of March was working on a factory production line. Fortunately for the model scene. Tracevproduction line. Fortunately for the model scene, TraceyJane Kennerley, boss lady of new agency Energy, kept phoning her up and pestering her to come back. So now, Chelci has hung up her spanner and will hopefully soon be gracing the cover of Cosmopolitan and other fashion magazines. magazines.

Model: CHELCI; Photograph: Kleinsorg & Apelbaum, Germany

Chelci's new agency is based, coincidentally, in Chelsea. No, her Dad wasn't a football fan: he named his daughter after the singer, Chelsea Brown.

The novel spelling was her grandmother's idea. Chelci hails from Gainsborough in Lincolnshire, and was brought, down to London aged fifteen by her mother to try to get signed up by a model agency. Every girl wants to be a model, 'she says. Storm model agency were interested in her and told her to come back in her and told her to come back after her exams. In Covent Garden, (presumably to see the sights) a lady walked up to her and asked her if she wanted to be a model. Chelci said she was a bit seated with all these 'really weird people around', but far from being a weirdo, the tady in question was Beth Boldt of Synchro (as it was then) now

...every girl want's to be a model...

...million to one chance launched her career...

This million to one chance launched her career. Returning home, she did her exams then applied for a summer job, in tending to stay on and do her A' levels, but Beth Boldt rang her evels, but Beth Boldt rang her up, and instead of swotting for the sixth form. Chelci was doing the Nike campaign, twice, and jet setting off to New York.

...big girls are 'in'...

Chelci's credits include Mexi-Chelci's credits include Mexi-can Vogue. Model Magazine, Donna and Seventeen (Ameri-can not British). In New York, having bought an open return ticket, she approached Elite, who told her she was too fat, and suggested that she go home for three weeks and lose some for three weeks and lose some weight. Chelci stands a full six feet, weights ten stone and says feet, weights ten stone and says she hasn't lost weight since. Certainly she is well propor-tioned and, according to her agent, big girls are 'in' now anyway. Also while in New York, she did a big promotion for the 1 Group.

From the Big Apple she hopped across the Pond and worked very successfully in Germany doing covers, a demonstration doing covers, a demonstration for amateur photographers, to show how photographers and models work together, and a Christmas card. But, she says, although she was working regu-larly, editorial in Germany doesn't pay much, so feeling a bit distillusioned she went home to Mum and Dad in Gainsbo to Mini and Dad in Gainsor-rough where she carned the princely sum of £69 rising to £87.64 at 18. That was her weekly rate, whereas as a fashion model she could make more than that in an hour. Philosophically she says she has now learned the value of money and hopefully won't repeat the mistake of so won't repeat the mistake of so many big earners of not saving something for a rainy day. She has just moved in with Tracey-Jane, who describes her as a young, pure girl and intends to keep her that way. Tracey stresses that there are many bad influences in the capital (drugs to name but one) which can lead a young model astray. And as to name but one) which can lead a young model astray. And as she has big plans for Chelci, she has no intention of letting that happen. Chelci too is quietly confident her new agency will go places and take her with it.

...bad influences extremely versatile. S can lead a young model astrav...

When Model Journal met her at Energy's Chelsea Harbour of-fice, she already had three castings lined up, including one for Giorgio Armani. Blue-eyed

Model: PAPE N'DORE BEGG, 6'2

Chelci is not what might be called a stunning blonde, but at six feet and only eighteen she has time on her side. Her port-folio demonstrated that she is not just very photogenic, but

Energy

Chelci's agent, Tracey-Jane Kennerley, a former model her-Kennerley, a former model herself, spent seven months working with advertising giants Saatchi and Saatchi. Currently she is renting space from Marco Rasala, though she stressed the two agencies are entirely separate. After starting with 12 models she has built up the agency to 48: 21 guys, 23 girls and 4 girls still at school. She wants these ...girls at school have to finish their education first...

last to finish their edu-cation first. When she has recruited another 12 she will arrange a 12 she will arrange a headsheet, but busi-ness is already picking up, and she is opening offices in Milan and Manchester and two in France. She has sev-Manchester and two in France. She has sev-eral interesting mod-els on her books; her biggest job to date has been for Annie, who did a Parker Pen commercial for Andreas Heuman in the States. She also has a French black model (see photo) Pape Ni Doire Begg, who she complains is constantly being poached by other agencies

by Alexander Baron

Number One Model Agency

Sheep, sun and acres of space are on the cards for Gill Neare on the cards for Gill Neville, co-founder of Number One Model Agency. Gill is emigrating to the Outback, where she will settle with her newly found Aussie husband, leaving her partner, Trudi Sidebotham, to manage the Birmingham based agency

headsheet

Gill's husband is a vet, so Gill will start a totally new life as-sisting him. We have yet to see whether a model agent can make such a startling change of lifestyle with ease, but Trudi assures us that Gill loves aniassures us that Offi loves ammals and that she has spent a lot of time in Australia over the past few months to make sure that she really is making the right decision. Model Journal wishes Gill every success with her future.

The two ex-models have been partners for almost five years and although Trudi will find it strange to be going solo, she is confident of having enough enconfident of having enough en-ergy to run the agency single-handed. Trudi, who has boundless vitality, said, 'I shall miss Gill terribly, and am not thinking of taking on another partner, although I will ob-viously need far more adminis-trative support. Besides, Gill will be hard to replace, as it is never easy to find someone will be hard to replace, as it is never easy to find someone with the qualities to handle the daily pressures of running a modelling agency. We have been together for nearly five years,' she added somewhat nostalgically; 'that's a long

Trudi and Gill have jointly handled all areas of agency work. However the books are Trudi's domain. This arrange-ment seems to have paid off, as the agency is thriving. The number of full-time models has been limited deliberately since the two partners feel it is better to be able to assure their models of regular employment rather than take on too many for the demand and have them resting' for more months than they work. Having said this, the their expectations to the type of work available in the Birming-ham modelling scene. Much to many models disappointment, many models disappointment, very little glamour work is available in this area, so the agency goes all out for commercial advertising. Recent events have centred on the motoring industry, with three Peugeot launches and a BMW show. This is not nearly as dull as it sounds. The launches are usually introduced with a fashion show and end with a charitable fund-raising event and a fabulous dinner. The models seem to enjoy it immensely, says Trudi.

agency has about 40 children on its books, and about half a dozen GLAMS (grey, leisured and monied) in addition to the 60 fashion models who grace its

In October Model Journal inter-

Model Journal has strong connections with Number One. One of MJ's ex- Absolute Beginners, lan Tworek, was taken on by the Bleming to be the Bleming of the B ginners, Ian Tworek, was taken on by the Birmingham agency, some years ago. 'Ian is doing extremely well with us', says Trudi. However, Number One is not satisfied enough to sit back and relax in the wake of success. 'We are always looksuccess. We are always look-ing for new faces, and not just in Birmingham. As long as a model is prepared to travel we are interested. Number One already import faces from all over the country - Scotland, Wales, Manchester and London - 'because the girls are often more polished, having had more catwalk experience.'

Number One is an agency with a national name for guaran-teeing solid, continuous em-ployment for its models and top models for its clients. The agency has a name to live up to, and we wish Trudi every suc-cess with the continuance of its reputation.

Image concious

Charity

Black models in Britain often find it hard to get work, so when Model Journal was approached and asked to provide twelve black models to go to a casting for a leading make-up company, we jumped at the chance. The company in question is about to launch a new product range specially formulated for black skin, and Model Journal decided to give this opportunity to some of its Absolute Beginners. The editor, Marcel Mueller, editor, Marcel Mueller, took a personal interest in the casting, since the magazine is always on the look-out for new talent. So Model Journal acted as middle man. The girls were phoned, appointments were organised, and the editor even took the trouble to go to the casting in person.

Apparently the camera never lies, but in this case it did. Although Model Journal stresses and re-stresses the importance of an attractive appearance it seems that it has not been seems that it has not been stressed enough. An attractive appearance does not just mean a well made-up face; we are also talking about personality and presentation. Our 'ambas-sadors' who represented the best that Model Journal could provide arrived in varying degrees of dishevelment, or else did not arrive at all. What good is a 'phone call the day after the casting telling us that you couldn't make it? Your absence had already been noted by a pregnant fanfare of total silence at the casting. Some of our Beginners (who, incidentally have just been relegated to a new file labelled 'Absolute No Hopers') neglected to bring their photographs, slouched, chewed gum throughout the interview and didn't seem to re-alise there is an 's' on the end of 'yes'. 'Na' seemed to be a of 'yes'. 'Na' seemed to be a likely substitute for the nega-tive but we are still in dispute over that because unfortunately we did not think to provide an interpreter! In all, three girls were chosen from a possible twelve.

Do you really want to be a model???????

twelve. So well done to Marissa, Karen, Chantel, Vivien, Addi, Charon, Faruk, Fiona, Larry, Charion and Nicola. Your performance at the casting session was truly remarkable.

Glamour photographer

Glamour photographer John Mason recently organised a charity bid for London Weekend Television's 'Telethon'. He was going to shoot a portfolio and had organised a meal for two at Pal Joey's - the luxurious West End nightclub. Pal Joey's have been in the spotlight recently because of their Nightclub Beauty of the Year Competition, and the club is rapidly becoming a hotspot for glamour models. The Sport was even prepared to feature the mour models. The Sport was even prepared to feature the winner on page three - all this for charity. However, London Weekend Television turned down the idea because it was reported to have been considered the wrong image for a charitable event. Since when did charity become so image concious?