

Would You Vote For A Convicted Felon?

Would you vote for a convicted felon? That was the question being asked after the conviction of Donald Trump for not one but thirty-four felonies. And these felonies were? At the very worst, paying off an extortionist who had threatened to embarrass him to his wife, his family, the world...The incident concerned may or may not have happened, but it wasn't illegal either way.

Leaving that aside, would you vote for any sort of convicted felon?

This photograph is of a badly burned three year old girl.

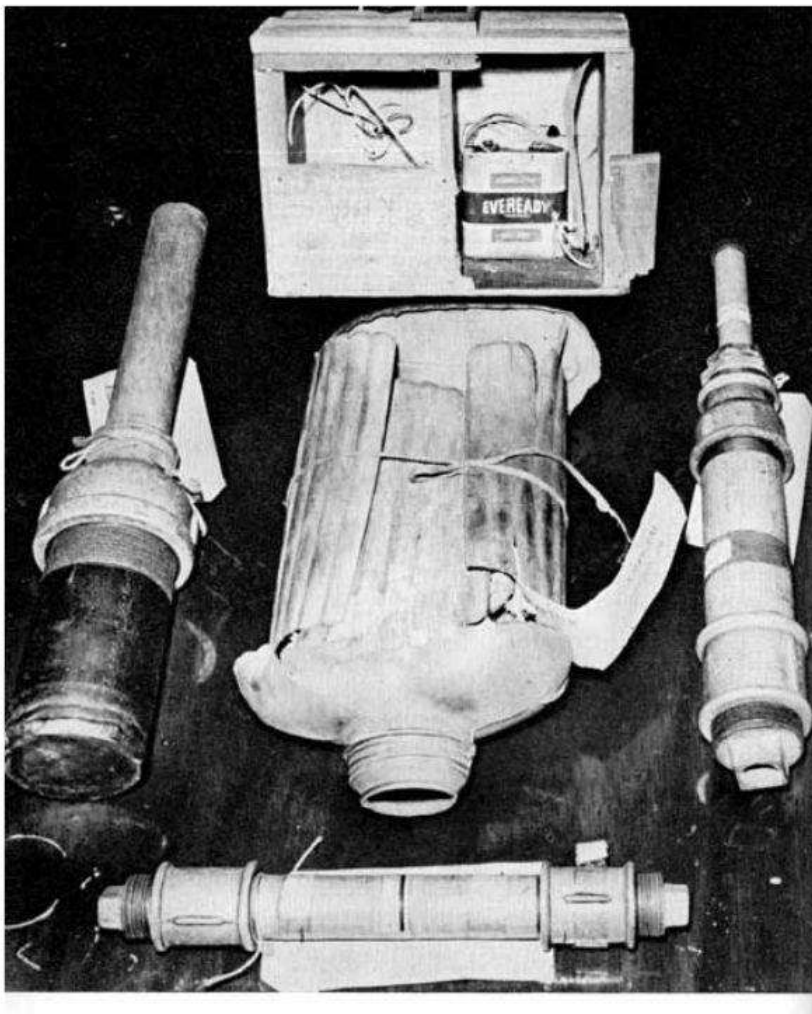

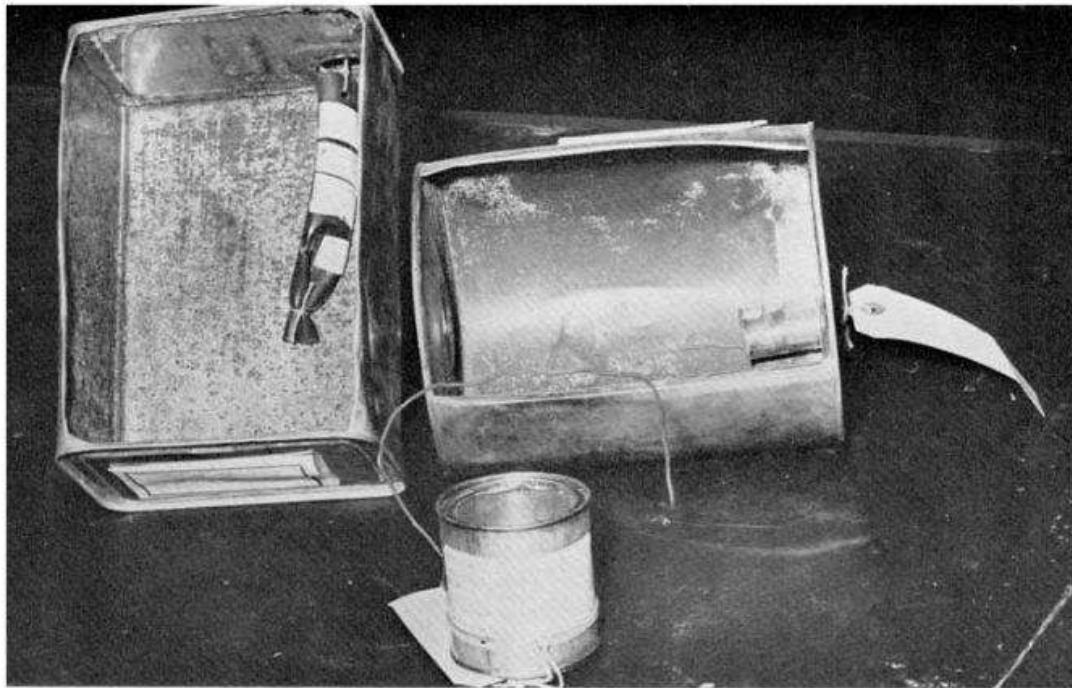

She was one of the victims of a bomb planted at a South African railway station in July 1964. Only one person was killed, a 77 year old woman. The terrorist murderer was John Harris, who was hanged the following year, the only white man to be executed for terrorist crimes under the Apartheid Government.

John Harris acted alone, but others had already planted bombs in South Africa. A month before this act of terrorism, a group of such terrorists had been convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment for a bombing campaign. One of those defendants at the Rivonia trial was Nelson Mandela.

Here are a few examples of Mandela's handiwork.

THE ATTACK ON LINES OF COMMUNICATION: A POWER PYLON OVERTURNED

The crimes of which Nelson Mandela was convicted were real, not imaginary, not contrived. Crimes of this nature have real human victims.

People not only voted for Nelson Mandela, they made him President, and in 1993, he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize. Three years before that he was awarded a more appropriate honour, the Lenin Peace Prize.

Nelson Mandela died nearly eleven years ago, and his legacy is such that many South African blacks are now talking about Apartheid as the good old days. By the same token, the overwhelming majority of Americans realise the Trump era was the good old days. The people who don't want to see Donald Trump retake the White House, including those who have been trying to destroy him, are largely parasites who have been bleeding America dry.

They have opened the southern border allowing in countless millions of people from all over the world. Some of these people are terrorists, there are criminal elements among them, including gang members. Many have no identity papers, and the overwhelming majority will be a burden on the taxpayer because they speak little if any English and have limited skills if any.

At the same time this is happening, billions of your tax dollars are being shipped abroad to fight foreign wars. The same people who have destroyed your southern border are defending the borders of Ukraine with money that could be used to house your folk, build infrastructure, run schools, take care of disabled veterans, even assist convicted felons to reintegrate into society on their release from prison.

Would you vote for a convicted felon? If you don't vote for one in November, you won't have a country left, because the felons who currently rule it, real felons who will never see the inside of a courtroom, are running it into the ground.
