

Dear Mrs Field,

Thank you for your response to my article and for your invitation to confirm the information you claim you gave the Ukrainian police. I'm sure you can also give me last week's winning numbers in the National Lottery. How stupid do you think I am?

You claim to have brought a murderer to book by consulting your spirit guide, the tea leaves, or whatever. Had you really performed such a feat you would be the most remarkable human being who ever lived instead of a sadly all too common type of woman and sometimes man who has the most gullible fans on the face of this planet.

Extraordinary claims demand extraordinary proof; miraculous claims demand miraculous proof. In your case this would be at the very least the following documents:

The invitation you received from the police.

Your witness statement in said case that attests to the facts claimed on your website.

Both these documents should be notarised by a Ukrainian Government official prior to the arrest of the individual concerned.

Until you are able to provide this quality of proof for miraculous claims – the day after Hell freezes over – I suggest you continue with the classical singing, an honest pastime for which clearly you have a considerable talent.

Yours Sincerely,

A Baron
