If you haven't heard of Bic Runga, like Michael Chapman she is one of those singer-songwriters who deserves to be better known. Granted the veteran from Leeds has a head start on her, having released his first album seven years before she was born, but the charming Miss Runga has a unique sound that deserves to be heard both more often and more widely.

If you haven't heard of her, she exploded onto the music scene in 1997 with Drive, having previously taken minor honours. Drive went platinum seven times in her native New Zealand, and therein lies the problem. Although it has long had a real music scene, including 1970s glam rockers like Space Waltz, and a band called Stellar* (she might just have heard of) as she has acknowledged herself in the past, it is too isolated, even in the cyber age. She has been around a bit though, including to both the US (where she spent some time) and France. She has also appeared on UK breakfast TV which exposed the British public to the magical Get Some Sleep. Sway, which is far from her best song, has been covered left, right and centre.

Since the phenomenal success of Drive though she has released only three albums: Beautiful Collision, Birds and Belle. There is also a compilation, but Belle dates to 2011. So what is she doing now? Well, next month and July she will be performing four dates in New Zealand with another singer-songwriter, Hollie Fulbrook. One can only hope this will lead to if not bigger and greater things then more frequent ones.
