In this liberated age, anything between consenting adults in private goes. Well, in the West anyway, and almost anything. What though if the adult can't consent because she is dead? This is what a man currently on trial for murder in Wales is alleged to have done.

Christopher May is a former butcher who is alleged to have put his skills to an unspeakable use. May met 47 year old Tracey Woodford in a public house last April. They left together, and she was never seen alive again. When police searched his premises after being alerted by the victim's family, they found body parts in his shower. Her head was found later; she had been strangled and raped, apparently after death.

May's defence is that she attacked him and he killed her in self-defence. His trial is scheduled to last two weeks, and the evidence so far has been harrowing.

If killing a woman and then violating her corpse is unspeakably depraved, where on the scale of depravity is having sex with a dog? This is what a man in Florida is alleged to have done; the dog concerned was only a puppy, so does this make him a puppyfile as well as a dog rapist if he is convicted?

The offence came to light after he filmed the dastardly act and sent the video to an ex-girlfriend, or if she wasn't an ex-girlfriend then, she is surely one now. This happened last month, and he was held in lieu of a $10,000 bond. The video does not appear to have been uploaded to YouTube, which is just as well, because a snuff film is bad enough, but a wuff film would too much for most people to stomach.

Finally, the crimes of Gayle Newland are no laughing matter; when a woman goes to bed with a man she is entitled to wake up next to one. In one of the most bizarre criminal trials of the year, she was accused of raping another woman by posing as a man and using a prosthetic penis in lieu of a real one. In September, Newland was convicted only of three counts of sexual assault, but this month she received an eight year sentence at Chester Crown Court. This may sound harsh, but although her victim was not physically damaged as are many rape victims, one can only wonder at the psychological effect this must have had on her.
