 Dmitri Kara	I’ve been working with London landlords and tenants for about two years now and after everything that happened lately, especially Brexit, housing price are something I could not predict at all, but I would certainly that tenants will have to spend more and more on their lease. As an end of tenancy cleaning technician I meet housing landlords on a daily basis, and for what I can say is that things are yet about to worsen with London tenancies. The rising restrictions and legal responsibilities landlords have, are ever more reflecting on tenants, and respectively, the whole niche and all involved in it, like Fantastic cleaners is. This method is used for one reason only, it works. It works in swaying people away from knowing the “truth” in said accusations. Why? To grossly protect “all” perverse criminals carrying out such dehumanizing crimes. For such egregious crimes occur continuously by both powerful men and women who do NOT want to get caught, go to jail or STOP their self-serving egregious abuses against their victims. However true justice and judgment shall fall upon all those who carry out such monstrous crimes and upon all those who criminal “protect” such perverted fiends without exception!!!!!! And there is nothing or no-one to protect any of the human trolls hunting, harming or hiding in plain view of the world, who infested humanity with their evils and perversions of wickedness.  Matt	Thank you for highlighting an interesting topic. I think it definitely takes a philosopher — one who is both musical and versed in the field of aesthetics — to characterise the nature of this “resonating with”. Here it seems that we are “scarcely entitled to say that we have progressed beyond Plato”, to use the words of Jaspers. To educated musicians, the capacity to distinguish between the effects of different kinds of music may come naturally, or at least the capacity to sense the existence of distinctions may do so. However, I was fascinated to notice that also to my musically uneducated friend said that he could hear that there was something more meaningful in the classical piece I played for him, without being able to, as it were, ‘listen’ to it — and that itself takes on a meaning. I see the larger question as ultimately being philosophical, rather than psychological. anomalies among a people that looks at everyone else as “the other” and then accuses them of that same thing. The vast majority of Southern Protestants are philosemitic and Zionist and have been so during their history in shaping the United States.

Alexander Baron,

“May 1915, his sentence was commuted” (May should be June) — You should add Frank’s death sentence was commuted to life in prison on June 21st, 1915, by the outgoing Governor John M. Slaton in a gross conflict of interest. The law firm representing Leo Frank was, ‘Rosser, Brandon, Slaton and Phillips’, the Slaton being none-other that Governor John Slaton. Leo Frank was a client of Governor Slaton’s law firm. Luther Rosser was lead attorney for Leo Frank during his trial and state appeals.

The Leo Frank Case has been turned into a racist, prejudiced, bigoted and anti-Gentile hoax by the four letter word: Jews.

Everytime you hear someone throw the word anti-Semite or Anti-Semitism at you, write a research paper on anti-Gentilism and Anti-Gentile Jews and publish it. Make sure to mention these two words Antigentile and Antigentilism. The traditional enemies of Western Civilization use these two words: Antisemitism and Antisemite to browbeat, demoralize, dehumanize, attack, defame, slander, libel and deracinate anyone who does not support or tow the false social-political narrative of the Jewish orthodoxy creating machine of Hollywood and Academe. Never go on the defense with sentient parasite, only on the offense and attack back hard.

It’s a shame that almost every book written on the case that takes the side of Leo Frank has to omit, mangle and suppress 99% of the evidence against Leo Frank from the 300+ page Leo Frank trial brief of evidence (1913) and 1,800+ page Leo Frank Georgia Supreme Court records.

I have only found two books so far that give people an accurate assessment of the Leo Frank Case.

- 1) The Murder of Little Mary Phagan by Mary Phagan Kean
- 2) Secret Relationship Between Blacks and Jews, PART 3: Leo Frank Guilty Man Lynched

Maybe you could read the 1st and 2nd book and publish some reviews of them.

Can Deism or Pantheism be adopted after that point? The point is a denial of the supernatural by definition excludes certain viewpoints including objective morality because it is irrational to hold them with that presupposition. Any philosophy adopted after that is dependent on that premise and secondary in nature.

<input type="checkbox"/>  Green Lantern probrojones@gmail.com 98.77.241.78	Two issues are intertwined. One is the presumption of guilt for anyone accused of sexual assault. The other is moral panic. Moral panic is a form of hysteria and group think. We saw this in the 80's when child abuse fears crystallized into quackery where so called psychologists were allowed to testify to "recovered memories" . Many lives were destroyed. Now the rape panic has crystallized into investigations in which accusation is treated as fact on college campuses. The Cosby case is trial balloon by the witch hunters to eliminate the presumption of innocence where sexual assault is concern. there is a transparent politics to this. There is a faction of the so called feminist movement which wants to empower themselves- get publicity, make political careers etc. Cosby is a means to entrenching their movement at the expense of men. Too many people were making money off of them and the public were enjoying them too much. Also, if you questioned the existence of witches, you questioned the existence of demons, and if you questioned the existence of demons, you questioned the existence of the devil, and if you questioned the existence of the devil, you questioned the existence of God. In reply to Anders.

A nicely-put plea, but rather naive. Underreporting of rape (and sexual assault in general) is an almost entirely male phenomenon. You're nowhere near halfway understanding this problem, or even what the word misogyny means, it seems. To state that women are at least as capable as men of lying is not misogyny. To state they lie more than men, because they've been taught to and allowed to since childhood, is not misogyny. These are just facts.

"Most women" do not cry rape, no, but almost all cries of rape today are false and it's always been the most falsely claimed crime; it's the ultimate weapon that a woman can swing. You've too little experience of women if you cannot conceive of how often this happens.

The quickest path to grasping this, really, is the money that can be made in so many claims. Germany recently pulled its "we believe you, here's a cheque" policy for rape claimants. Rape claims dropped by over 80% instantly.

 Enza Ferreri	In reply to Alexander Baron . No, it IS true that there is a legal lane for women and one for men, at least in some important respects: men cannot claim rape if they had sex while they were drunk, for example. As you can see in this case, the two people involved acted pretty much in the same way, but only to the woman was open the possibility of claiming victimhood, not to the man. <input type="checkbox"/>  Anders landjo@gmail.com m 78.41.128.14	In reply to Arminds' copy of Swank. I agree that feminism is guilty of quite a bit of harmful generalisations. At least the visible parts; not the broad swathes of feminist-sympathisers that naively think that the movement is for equality, pure and simple. But justifying using false rape accusations to conclude that women cry rape is making exactly the same mistake that we accuse feminism of. I think we should try to avoid them. Not only to be consistent, but to get more traction from our message by not making ourselves vulnerable to sweeping accusations of misogyny or trivialising sexual assault. It is by painting a narrative, peppered with out-of-context quotes from frustrated MRAs, of pervasive victim blaming that many feminists can get away with their ministrations and despicable, anti-democratic views. After all, the problem of false accusations and underreporting are intimately connected. It is a careful balancing act to combat both at the same time while avoiding miscarriage of justice. Reducing the debate to focus on only one issue will exacerbate that tendency, with the pendulum swinging back and forth and many people, falsely accused as well as sexual assault victims, suffering in the process.	Lisa Longstaff Can't Stop Lying About Rape View Post 31	2016/03/09 at 4:54 pm

Men who allege homosexual rape or schoolboys who are "groomed" by older women are likewise given anonymity. While this is right for the young, it should not be tolerated for adults. <input type="checkbox"/>	Sean Colemanseanmairecoleman@gmail.com86.45.106.62	Alexander, this is a really excellent article. It is very informative and has made my own enquiries (such as they are) easier. I have been looking at the phenomenon of witch hunts over the past few years since stumbling on the late Richard Webster's excellent website, Sceptical Essays. I assume you know about it. If not be sure to look it up. Read Casa Pia – The Making of a Modern Witch Hunt first. I had been keeping a close eye on the Westminster paedophile ring fantasy over the last while but never got round to Savile. I was amazed when finally a named witness was found but have heard little since except indications that she is disturbed. Hilariously a Newsnight report some months ago seriously advanced the suggestion that the reason for the lack of police witnesses is the Official Secrets Act. In these things, as you obviously know, common sense is absent. Last week I finally decided to have a look at the Savile case. Being familiar with the way these things go, I expected to find a possible small core of truth and loads of fantasy. This has proved to be the case. I have watched a number of YouTube videos along the way and left comments here and there as I have gone along. Now I knew what to expect but on two occasions, near the start, I began to doubt myself and wonder if this was the case to prove the rule. The first was the allegation by his grand-niece that he abused her twice when she was 12 and 15. The second was the man who had appeared as a cub on Jim'll Fix It. When I checked the story behind the claims it became quickly apparent they were not to be believed. Then I saw the evidence from the Broadmoor arsonist. And this is this the way it has gone. Last night I looked quickly at the necrophilia claims. I had assumed this was people taking Savile's sense of humour literally. An Associated Press report (YouTube) said that he had access to the morgue, that he had told a student nurse that he like having sex with dead bodies and concluded that that was that. Unfortunately, it went on, the man in charge of the morgue had since died ('unfortunately') 'so we couldn't talk to him'. As you obviously know, in witch hunts (as also in global warming and other issues, by the way), you can in no way rely on media reports but have to check the facts, each one, as best you can. Two things you might not have noticed I might mention briefly. Firstly, a Guardian leader (the Guardian is particularly gullible to moral crusades) suggested that the 'sheer improbability' of how Savile managed to rape all those people (rape of course being the media description of nearly every assault, no matter how petty) in broad daylight (and this, remember, with all those rumours which were (apparently) raging and the beady eyes of the tabloids watching his every move hoping for him to slip up). A better explanation of course is that it was highly improbable because it was highly improbable. The second was a suggestion by a guest on one of Philip Schofield's breakfast programmes that Savile was so cunning that he chose as victims young girls who were petty criminals so that nobody would ever take their word against 'Sir Jimmy Savile OBE'. I kid you not! (Was that one of his catch phrases?) On the same programme Schofield himself (I think) mentioned that Savile's	Rolf Harris And The Next Witch-Hunt VictimView Post2	2016/03/08 at 11:02 pm conferred super powers on him.

Finally,, as I must leave it here for now, I have been looking up the cases of the men charged under Yewtree, including Tarbuck and Cliff Richard last night. The collusion between S. Yorks. Police and the BBC, who were tipped off about the raid on his house, is a blatant example of what Webster calls ‘crossing the line’ where, in their righteous war on evil, those who should no better leave objectivity behind.

Your speculation about the motives of the false witnesses is close to what I have been thinking, but I’ll leave that for another occasion.

One final thing before I go (like Columbo), I think you mentioned the sheer number of allegations conferring validity on each one. This is the case in the Savile case. The Janet Smith review has no, or very little, evidence but it is clear (she says so throughout) that Savile’s guilt is assumed and then banal occurrences acquire a ‘chilling’ significance. Wherever you look in the case each allegation cannot stand up for itself but relies on the other allegations. But they in turn can’t stand up either, so there’s the problem.

In the Casa Pia case in Portugal, Carlos Cruz (their ‘Mr Television’) had proof of his innocence (eg phone and credit card information proving he couldn’t have been where he was alleged to have been) but the court did not accept it. Moreover, they withdrew many of the charges at a very late stage (they didn’t stand up) and replaced them with new ones, allowing the defence no time to prepare. They invented a new concept, or concepts, in order to convict him: ‘emotional resonance’ and ‘the resonance of truth’ (‘a resonancia de verdade’) which is the same thing, obviously, as in the Savile case. Cruz is still behind bars.

It’s funny in a way. My first thought when I read the headline was “troll” but it was worst than that. A troll is contrary for the sake of being contrary. You are contrary for the reason that you are a terrible cocktail of ignorant and stupid.

You listened to them once (and not even everything from Young Americans – Blackstar) and declare them nothing. Oh wait, I suddenly get it, this should be filed under comedy? I’m just uncertain why you would attempt to write an opinion on a subject you clearly know (as you admit) extremely little to nothing about?

I will concede it was brave of you to include a link to your personal page. Not many people would follow up their ignorant opinion to a long list of writing that shows you to be a holocaust denier (“revisionist”? Ugh, take your semantic games and fuck off), a rape apologist, and general idiot.

I have to say though, you did make me laugh out loud. Your bit of writing about not being a scholar, but because you’ve read a bit in a library you essentially are one, brought a genuine smile on my face.

All the best. But, please I do mean this in the spirit it is intended – Fuck. Off.

I was too young for Bowie in the ‘70s. I didn’t like him too much in the ‘80s – ‘Let’s Dance’ was too synth and I wasn’t keen on the ‘New Romantics’ unlike most others in the sixth form. I preferred more guitar driven music. However, when Bowie returned to guitar based music this was with Tin Machine, and I didn’t like that much. However, listening back, I like bits of Bowie’s ‘70s output. I also prefer individual songs rather than being gripped by any single album. For what it’s worth, ‘Rocket Man’ is better than ‘Space Oddity’, even if the latter may have borrowed a bit from the former.

However: A person doesn't have to be a saint to be raped or to have the right to sue if they are defamed. Bill Cosby is no saint either. He was a serial philanderer. Not exactly someone you would want to take home to your mother either is he? Does that make him a rapist? No. But Janice Dicksons history doesn't make her a false accuser either. How do you know that the sexual abuse "clearly existed only in Miss Dickinson's head"? Where you there? Has it been disproven? You just disbelieve people automatically. Her family have never stated that she was defaming their dead father. "What would she have done if Cosby had really raped her and would she have waited 32 years to do it?" – If someone rapes you then you are often afraid of them which she presumably wasn't with her husband. She was asked a question and could not remember the answer. Later when she had time to think she could remember. How is this evidence of lying exactly? How did Cosby contact her: he could have phoned her hotel? She might not have written about being raped for fear of being sued or because it was too painful to write about. This is not evidence of lying. Maybe Janice Dickinson is lying about Bill Cosby (and her father). Maybe he did rape her. Nobody knows. Being unstable and unpleasant in no way means that Janice Dickinson couldn't have been raped.	Janice Dickinson – A Life Of ScandalView Post4	2016/01/22 at 1:27 pm

A false rape allegation (in my book) is where the alleged victim (or someone else) makes a claim that a rape happened. In rare cases a woman may genuinely believe she has been raped when she hasn't – Old Hag, for example. I would still classify these as false. A woman who has been raped but identifies the wrong man or the wrong man is convicted is a rape victim period. This is a true allegation but also a miscarriage of justice. Compare with a murder in which the wrong person is accused or convicted, you wouldn't call that a false murder. A not-guilty verdict may indicate the allegation was false the same way a man may be convicted and yet still be innocent. These are legal issues. I am not concerned with such legal issues, only with documented facts.	Guess Who Wasn't Raped Last Year? View Post 18 ▼	2016/01/04 at 5:40 pm

In reply to Hendrik Vanderstijn.

Off the record conversations with lawyers in the UK and US; you will find occasional candid references from police officers especially in the US. Largely though this is based on my own researches which are almost entirely based on public domain sources. I’m currently working on a big timeline of false rape allegations, and if I live long enough, will make a video about them.

The 2-8% figure is fantasy; it has no basis in fact. Very often the police will give a woman a chance to retract when she is making an allegation they believe is false. If she does withdraw the allegation, it is “no crimed”. These figures don’t go into the crime statistics. Sometimes they get it wrong, but only rarely. Recently, police in the UK have taken to issuing fixed penalty notices to false accusers.

You can’t believe anything the rad-fems say, including, indeed especially their academics; they simply lie. See for example my blog “Who Invented Rape Culture?”

The best evidence though is I think real rape victims; a woman who has a knife held to her throat or a gun held to her head can be forgiven for not fighting back, but most genuine victims do, most report the assault at once or nearly at once, and for this they are credible. Drunken sluts, head cases and scorned women are not.

That’s been my experience as well. The methodologically rigorous research that exists shows the rate to be between 2-8% (which is always accompanied by a notation that this is in line with other violent crimes – though I haven’t seen any data on that to back up.)

I actually wrote a blog article on this exact topic, with bibliography and in-line citations:

Citation needed. False accusations are a problem, but of all the data I’ve seen on the subject, I’ve never seen any that would support a high percentage as 50%

False accusations create victims of those falsely accused. Rape claims have always been a favorite of a certain type of vindictive woman. And they are rarely punished properly for the damage they inflict on others. If false accusations were punished with severity, they would go away.

This whole thing is a fiasco. First of all, it trivializes real rape, it makes a mockery of due process and it gives any woman the power to just accuse you of rape without proof.

See for example below. You mentioned Lockerbie, how was there no physical evidence? I would have thought 270 dead bodies was strong evidence indeed rather than an imaginary crime such as Gary Glitter was convicted of. You may shed no tears for him, but you'd feel very different if some little tart with whom you'd once had a fling accused you of rape ten years from now, or maybe some demented female who thought you looked like a man who'd once been rude to her in a shop so decided to punish you instead. Wake up and smell the venality. http://news.wikinut.com/Why-We-Need-A-Statute-Of-Limitations/kk4e9u85/ http://www.thelatestnews.com/gloria-allred-attacks-the-statute-of-limitations/ http://www.thelatestnews.com/gloria-allreds-despicable-crusade/	The International Celebrity Witch- Hunt View Post 4	2015/12/21 at 5:18 pm
<input type="checkbox"/> ecstatist jamusdougus@ya hoo.com 172.9.188.214	Assuming that there is a statute of limitations of some arbitrary number of years and some very strong evidence turns up (say a non-digital film – almost impossible to fake) of a child being brutally raped (by a celebrity?) how would you feel if you had to go to the victim who had been unable to get a successful prosecution for 30 years and you explain to her that there is nothing anyone can now do (legally) to the perpetrator? How would you feel? How do you think the victim would feel (and all the other victims?) There is no need for a statute of limitations providing the court judges evidence wisely and ensures that the investigation has been even-handed. Your only reasoning for this statute is to prevent bad judging and yet you make an exception for murder where judgement errors have much worse consequences. Politicians would still get away with murder. The Lockerbie judgement was shockingly wrong because of political pressure. No physical evidence.The only witness with any form of evidence (relying on highly unreliable human abilities of recognition and memory) was paid $ 1,000,000 by the CIA. Are you a Catholic? How many priests were convicted wrongly of crimes that had been committed decades before. Almost none? Gary Glitter is a terrible example. Michael Jackson paid $50,000 hush money to one of the first accusers. There have been many innocent people found guilty by grossly negligent police/prosecutor/judge/jury work. Yet they have "professional" immunity. There must be more accountability from these arrogant people.	The International Celebrity Witch- Hunt View Post 4	2015/12/21 at 3:24 pm

<input type="checkbox"/>  JayRaskin jayraskin@gmail.com 71.47.12.151	Good information, Alexander. I haven't really studied the case, but from quickly skimming four or five articles, there are a couple of other troubling aspects. The jury did not convict on the charges that at least three of the witnesses brought. That, plus the one who admitted lying brings to four out of fourteen accusers who had serious problems with their stories. Apparently, the investigating detective interviewed all the women whom the police officer ran background checks on. However, the article did not say how many women that was. If it was only 30 or 40 women then the fact that 13 would accuse him would suggest a definite pattern. However, he was apparently doing this for three or four years. Let us say that he ran background checks on one women per week for three years. That would be around 150 women. If the detective interviewed that many, it is quite possible that 13 would fabricate stories. If a police officer starts asking you about a particular time you were stopped by a police officer six months or a year previously and starts telling you that he is being investigated for rape or sexual assault, certain women who are drug addicts and/or habitual criminals, as at least some of these women appear to be, would quickly realize that saying she was sexually assaulted or raped would be a very good thing to say. You could potentially make a lot of money off of a lawsuit and it would keep the police off your back in the future. Being a prostitute or drug addict does not mean you are naive and stupid. The other thing in the police officer's favor is that he did not go for a plea bargain. If he knew that he was guilty of assaulting that many women, the logical thing to do would be to seek a plea bargain of say 15-20 years, and be out in 7-10 years. Few people would risk life imprisonment as against such a sentence. Certainly, the prosecutors would have offered him some such plea bargain as none of the women were physically hurt and they would not have wanted to embarrass the whole Oklahoma City Police Department as they did with the trial.	The Predator With A Badge View Post 1 ▼	2015/12/14 at 2:42 pm

Victor Grayson	There seems to be a market for sweeter tomatoes. Good idea.	Science Makes Sweeter Tomatoes View Post 2	2015/12/02 at 9:30 am rkt9	It is unlikely the new sweeter tomatoes will be brought to market, at least in the U.S.A. Harry Klee, professor at the university of Florida has spent the last 15 years developing the Garden Gem, a tomato that has a superior flavor, high yields and great shelf life. Growers and commercial buyers are not interested in marketing these tomatoes, and continue to sell the same bland flavorless types to consumers. Thief! Everyone very soon everyone will know who you guys really are. They all think Your Saint is the scammer, but people like YOU are the architects designing this scams for her. Tell me, how do you sleep at night? Is ‘making the £’ in the UK that baad you have to defraud any vulnerable person that comes your way through these lies and mahdness??

This woman is nothing short of a fruaaadulent character. The misspelling is done on purpose, as I was banned twice for trying to shed some light on her character.

Alexia Thomas styles herself Her Knowledgeable Professor Alexia Thomas; she has a degree in what and from where? That is another question. She is also known as or has been known as Lizzy Henz. As it is less likely someone calling herself Professor Alexia Thomas would change her name to Lizzy Henz, it is reasonable to assume the latter came first, and indeed a little research reveals this to be the case. She was born in Nigeria, and her first vocation was as a singer. A mother of four, when she and her husband separated, he took custody of their offspring.

How she came to the UK is probably not important, how she is continuing to run the Independent Diplomat Commission is something of a mystery, because in August 2010 she was convicted at Southwark Crown Court – as Lizzy Henz – on eight counts of providing immigration advice and services while not qualified to do so. She was charging people £35 each for an identity card, and then £1500 for an engagement fee.

I have left out the link to this excerpt, in order to avoid the clutches of NL’s spambot.

I’ve tried LED’s for my art display, the lights need to be on all the time, while they use less energy, they are very expensive to buy and don’t last very long.

Professional filmmakers and videographers have been using LED’s for a decade or more, though reliable instruments with consistent color temperatures are very expensive. Even though these new LED’s are “cheaper,” will they be more affordable at retail?

In fact, they are extremely important for you to maintain a healthy diet. Now, if you are overweight and your doctor has cautioned you away from such foods until your levels are regulated, thats a completely different story. But any healthy person can enjoy carbs and eggs and fats without an issue as long as they dont over do it.	Scientists Discover Why High Intensity Interval Training Can Match Endurance Training View Post	2015/11/16 at 7:44 pm

 Bartek Zdanowski	Man, who is so stupid not to eat for 24hrs and then drink almost 0.5 litre of energetic drink wtih 240mg of caffeine? For me it's too sophisticated experiment. People eat and they drink one (250ml) can at a time with 32mg/100ml (80mg) of caffeine. MR W HAYS appeared on behalf of the Crown
Comment -----

J U D G M E N T

1. MR JUSTICE MADDISON: On 25 August 2010 in the Crown Court at Southwark the appellant PA, also known as PA, and who is now 37, was convicted on 8 counts of providing immigration advice and services when not qualified to do so contrary to section 91 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999. On 24 September His Honour Judge Higgins sentenced her to 18 months’ imprisonment to be served concurrently on each count. She appeals against sentence by leave of the single judge.

2. She was the director of a company called Independent Diplomatic Commission Limited which operated from an address in the Woolwich Arsenal area. When section 91 of the 1999 Act came into force in 2001 it became an offence to provide immigration services and advice unless the provider was a qualified person, such as a solicitor, barrister or an individual or organisation registered with the Office of Immigration Services Commission. Neither the company to which we have referred nor the appellant were qualified persons allowed to give such advice. The appellant claimed in advertisements to have many qualified lawyers working for her, but in truth she had none.

3. Between 9 August 2007 and 31 October 2008 she provided immigration services and advice to eight individuals. She claimed to advocate for them and made applications to the Home Office for leave to remain on their behalf, providing the formal application forms and additional documentation and making representations. On some occasions the individuals had to pay £35 for an identity card before assistance would be provided and then an engagement fee of £1500. There was no direct evidence about the total income generated in this way, but the judge concluded that it would not have been insubstantial.

4. The appellant came before court with one previous conviction for assaulting a constable, for which she received a suspended sentence of imprisonment on 18 November 2009.

5. The judge had a pre-sentence report which indicated that the appellant did not accept any responsibility for committing the offences concerned. There were, however, concerns for her mental and physical health, given that she had refused to eat since being remanded in custody. Given the concerns over her mental health, the court was invited to consider adjourning the matter to obtain a psychiatric report. Should any alternative to custody be considered, then a suspended sentence order with an unpaid work requirement was suggested. The report recorded that the appellant’s four children had been living with her ex-husband since her remand in custody.

6. Passing sentence the judge observed that this was not merely a technical offence. It was plain that the operation was designed to generate an unlawful income for the appellant, and that any benefit to others would be no more than incidental or accidental. The judge said the appellant had no regard to the harm that she might do to those who put their trust in her. Having presided over the appellant’s trial the judge concluded that she had been guilty of the most deplorable and deeply antisocial behaviour, including serious breaches of the trust which she encouraged others, many of whom were highly vulnerable, to place in her. The judge said that he would take account of the pre-sentence report and the appellant’s personal circumstances, but there was virtually no mitigation. The histrionics which she had displayed during trial and her behaviour SMITH BERNAL WORDWAVE in prison were driven by only two motives, an attempt to distract attention from her serious and routine criminality and an attempt to minimise the consequences. The judge observed that the maximum sentence for each of the offences was 2 years’ imprisonment, and went on to pass the concurrent sentences of 18 months to which we have referred.

7. The grounds of appeal initially concerned the length of the sentence, which it was said was manifestly excessive having regard to the personal circumstances of the appellant and to such guidance as was available as to the appropriate sentence for a case of this kind.

8. In the latter regard, reliance was placed on the appellant’s behalf on the case of Clark [2008] EWCA Crim. 893 and on a schedule helpfully provided by the prosecution setting out sentences that had been passed in broadly comparable cases in various Crown and Magistrates’ Courts. We have to say that having considered those other cases, our provisional view would be that the sentence of 18 months in total was indeed too long, but things have moved on and it is unnecessary for us to consider that aspect of the case in any further detail.

9. Things have moved on because although there was no way at all of knowing this at the time the case was before the Crown Court, it now seems likely that the behaviour of the applicant, both at the time of committing the offences and at the time of and subsequent to the trial, was caused or contributed towards by her mental illness. When this case first came before us on 10 December of this year, we had a report from Dr Sergei Grachev, indicating that on 25 November 2010 the appellant had been moved from prison to the Bracton Centre, a psychiatric unit in Dartford, Kent, with a mental state mainly characterised by persecutory delusions, grandiose ideas and abnormal affective state with agitation. We adjourned for a full psychiatric report to be prepared with a more detailed diagnosis and prognosis.

10. We have now received a report dated 20 December from Dr Catherine Penny, a specialty registrar in forensic psychiatry at the Bracton Centre. She is approved under section 12 of the Mental Health Act 1983. We have today been provided with a further or the from Dr Chatterjee, also approved under section 12 of the Mental Health Act. We are grateful to both medical practitioners, but in particular to Dr Penny, for the speed and thoroughness with which they have prepared their helpful reports, all of which we have read.

11. It is clear that the appellant does indeed have both grandiose and persecutory delusions. Both doctors state that she suffers from a mental illness known as delusional disorder. This probably developed during late adolescence or early adult life. The disorder contributed to the commission of the offences now before the court in that the appellant believed that she did have special expertise in immigration law, and could therefore legitimately help people with their immigration problems. This disorder, it appears, can often be persistent, particularly without treatment.

12. The appellant has not yet shown any significant response to medication. She lacks insight into her own disorder. Were she to be returned to prison or released into the SMITH BERNAL WORDWAVE community without responding to treatment, then she would not accept treatment. In those circumstances the recommendation is for a hospital order under section 37 of the Mental Health Act 1987.

13. Mr McKenna, who represents the appellant today, has said everything on her behalf that could properly be said. He has told us of the instructions which he has received from the appellant to the effect that she does not feel that a hospital order is necessary or appropriate. He has asked us to consider the possibility of a community order with a mental health requirement, but the concluding paragraphs of Dr Penny's report really provide the answer, and a compelling answer it is, to that suggestion. The fact is that given her lack of insight into her own predicament, the appellant would simply not take the medication that she requires were that course taken, rather than the course which seems to us to be the inevitable outcome of today's proceedings, namely a hospital order.

14. We allow the appeal by substituting hospital orders for the sentences passed by the judge. The hospital order will attach to each of the offences concerned.

15. There are certain formalities that we have to pronounce. We are satisfied on the written evidence of Dr Penny and Dr Chatterjee that the appellant is suffering from the mental disorder to which we have referred. We are satisfied that the disorder is of a nature or degree which makes it appropriate for the appellant to be detained in hospital for medical treatment. It is our opinion, having regard to all the circumstances, including the nature of the offences and the character and antecedents of the appellant, and to the other means of dealing with her, that the most suitable means of dealing with this case is by means of a hospital order. We are moreover satisfied that arrangements have been made for the appellant's admission to hospital within 28 days of today. In fact, the practical effect of the decision that we have taken is that she will simply remain at the Bracton Centre at which she is presently an inmate.

16. We are grateful both to Mr McKenna and, at least for his attendance, to Mr Hays. For the reasons which we hope clearly to have explained, the appeal is allowed and the sentence is varied. The defendant addressed the judges

17. MR JUSTICE MADDISON: So that it is on the transcript, can I indicate that somewhat unusually after judgment had been given the appellant PA sought to address us and in all the difficult and sensitive circumstances of this case we thought it right to allow her to do so, even though she is represented by counsel. We have taken into account all of the representations that she has made to us. It remains our view, for the reasons expressed in our earlier judgment, that a community order would be simply an inappropriate way of dealing with the case, and insofar as the appellant asks in effect for a transfer to a hospital other than the Bracton Centre, we can only make a hospital order if we are satisfied that arrangements have been made for admission to a particular institution, and we have no information about any institution other than the Bracton Centre. Moreover, it is our view that since the appellant is presently receiving treatment at the Bracton Centre it would, despite, I am afraid, the appellant's own views, be an entirely counter-productive course, even if we had the power to do so, to make an order which would involve her transfer to another hospital. We are grateful to the appellant for the courtesy with which she made her submissions, but the outcome of the appeal remains the same. Thank you very much.

Henz (37), of Battery Road, Thamesmead, knew that she was required to be regulated by the Office of the Immigration Services Commissioner (OISC) to give immigration advice, but she continued to do so whilst not allowed to do so. Henz, who has no legal status to remain in the UK, began giving advice and services from her Battery Road home in June 2008. She came under investigation after the OISC received complaints from a number of her clients who were given false information and charged for documents and ID Cards that she claimed would help them with their status in the UK. Henz was convicted on 8 counts of providing immigration advice and services, and given an 18-month prison sentence with the judge recommending automatic deportation. Immigration Services Commissioner, Suzanne McCarthy said, This conviction and sentence illustrates the seriousness of the offence and will hopefully act as a deterrent to others who illegally provide immigration advice.  Andrew Magness	interesting article for sure. I've used HIITalmost exclusively for the last several years and have trained for many endurance events with it (50 mile runs, adventure races, ultra bike races, triathlon). I love it. It works for me (ultramentalbook.com). But what this article misses is that HIIT(real hit, what i lovingly call SHIIT because of what it does to my bowels) is inaccessible to most people. Sure, theoretically it can produce the benefits of higher volume training. It does for me. But consistent use of it to create, say, a 15-20 minute weekly routine that maximizes fitness (endurance) is not something that most wanna be endurophiles will be able to tolerate. So for most, even in light of this new 'research', traditional high volume training will continue to appeal more I figure.	Scientists Discover Why High Intensity Interval Training Can Match Endurance Training View Post 43 ▼	2015/11/06 at 2:02 am

 Chavez Clemons	It makes sense. In nature, there are long periods of lull followed by intense periods of activity (for example, a lion chasing his next meal or a gazelle trying to outrun a lion). Our bodies have found a way to strengthen themselves from this type of activity. Very fascinating indeed. I can't wait to hear more developments.  Timgreetsfromgermany	This is only addressing triggers for mitochondria genesis and none other of multiple relevant factors for endurance performance. Don't get me wrong, it's a well done study. But stop misinterpreting and exaggerate. It takes good skills to understand and interpret scientific papers and this behaviour totally lacks respect and appreciation for those. HIIT is not a substitute to high volume training. It's a very (very!) good supplement and has its obvious perks regarding basic endurance work. You seem like a genuine and intelligent man, but do remember that not a single women in UK or US legal history has ever been the victim of a false accusation of rape. This is NOT misogyny (such a thing barely exists and I defy anyone who can demonstrate a broad hatred of women) but a reminder that failing to teach half of human children about two-way consent and respect simply creates generation after generation of liars who can assault with impunity and blame a man. Nobody in the MRM hates women. We hate the state and the sociopaths it employs to maintain violent control over the public, through subjugation and violence against males. <input type="checkbox"/>  Anders landjo@gmail.com m 78.41.129.7	In reply to disqus_QL05BqU79X. Again, allow me to disagree mildly. Rape is not “often” lied about by women. Even if 50% of rape accusations are false or wrongful (recognising that there are many shades of gray), that adds up to 50.000 false accusations per year in the US, out of a population of well over 150 million women, or 100 million sexually active women. In no way does that justify the claim that women cry rape. In fact, the overwhelming majority would not dream of such a despicable, callous act. I think it is important to recognise this fact. Estimating false accusations as a percentage of accusations is misleading at best, and a flimsy justification for misogyny at worst. And it is not likely to lead us anywhere.	Lisa Longstaff Can’t Stop Lying About Rape View Post 31	2015/10/29 at 11:39 am
<input type="checkbox"/>  disqus_QL05BqU79X daddybones45@yahoo.com 81.139.109.172	In reply to Anders. Then I apologise for what seemed to be an assumption. Few people are prepared to accept that rape is so often lied about by women. It’s hardly misogyny to point out an uncomfortable truth, of course, but disagreeing on anything with women as a subject gets you called that these days. I personally consider respect for women to include their agency for vice as well as virtue – same as men. Male-on-male rape in prisons, war zones, the military, boarding schools and other institutions where males are bound or enclosed is indeed a big issue – and would seem to constitute around 80%, maybe more, of all rape in our society – but men raping women is far more rare than people are taught to believe. The continuing decline in male-on-female sexual assaults is nothing to do with sex crime “laws” (they don’t have much effect at all, really, and are written only to process bodies through the corporate legal system) but technology and more ready access to porn as a displacement. Porn up, rape down, as it’s been said. Anyway, interesting stuff. Just not a topic many people are open to discuss.	Lisa Longstaff Can’t Stop Lying About Rape View Post 31	2015/10/28 at 6:23 pm

 Ryan Polega	In reply to JoeLearner . The reason why tomatoes from the store are tasteless is because they literally ripened artificially. They are picked green and then when they want to be "ripe" they put them in a chamber and fill it with ethylene gas. Turns em red but doesn't create sugar like a normal vine ripened would. <input type="checkbox"/>	Anderslandjo@gmail.comm93.29.174.178	In reply to Funcuz. Actually I specifically did NOT assume that only a tiny fraction of rape Claims are lies. All I said was that even if we assume that 50% are (which, sadly enough, is not unreasonable), that still adds up to only a tiny percentage of WOMEN crying rape. I think it is important to make it clear that we are not letting These sad Facts justify misogynistic generalisations. I find it perfectly reasonable that a high rate of false rape accusations coexist with low rates of reporting. As a male assaulted by another male in a dating Situation that I blamed myself for (but should not, if I were a woman at least), I cannot stress enough how going to the Police was the absolutely last Thing on my mind. Sure, a female victim will be better received than a male one, but even if I could Count on a benevolent reception, the mere thought of going through the excruciating rehashing of Events I just wanted to Forget was Anathema to me. So I buy the MRA estimates of false reports. But I also buy much of the Feminist narrative on unreported rapes. And I find it sad how we fail to notice that we are not talking about women or men, but a small Group of probably disturbed and ruthless individuals who inflict great harm on others (both rapists and false accusers). Deducing that women cry rape is not only factually false, but undermines our credibility when we, justifiably so, criticise rampant misandry behind things like all men are rapists. I also fully understand your Point about indoctrination. Going to college in the 90s, I remember how, even back then, it was somehow fashionable to Claim to be a rape victim, and when I, with righteous Indignation, pushed my friends to go to the Police, I now, in retrospect, realise that the reason they did not want to was because they themselves recognised it was an ideologically-inflamed reinterpretation at best. I can understand how normal, decent women, upset because the guy from last night did not call back like he used to after their drunken Encounter, think back to his persistent come-ons and his promises and feel, well, cheated. The Logical step to a radically expanded Definition of rape is not a large one from there. And voila, you have a rape. And maybe even an accusation. Unapprove Reply Quick Edit Edit Spam Trash	Lisa Longstaff Can't Stop Lying About Rape View Post 31	2015/10/26 at 6:00 pm

Of course, using an expanded Definition of rape, women will rape men more than the opposite. Not because they are evil, but for the simple reason that women have never been taught to ask for consent. It is not part of the ritual. If such a broad Definition of rape is warranted, or if female-perpetrated rape is as much an issue as male-perpetrated – I do not know. But it Warrants an honest discussion at the very least. I would be happy to give space to a well-reasoned Argument that male-perpetrated rape is the larger issue, but it will be impossible to Dispute the Claim that male victims of rape have been seriously neglected.	Lisa Longstaff Can't Stop Lying About Rape View Post 31	2015/10/26 at 5:49 pm

SkymovesSideways	The most poignant emotional reaction I get from music, beyond simple appreciation, is associations with experiences. When I hear Judith by A Perfect Circle I think of my mother’s abusive relationships with men, about my friend crying in front of me for her cheating boyfriend; and how repulsed I feel that they can’t leave these careless people behind. When I hear Separator by Radiohead I remember dropping acid on a mountain and feeling elated. That being said; I don’t understand how a study of this nature can make absolutely no mention of the relevance of experience; nor do I understand what’s meant by the phrase negative music. Happy sounding music (with few exceptions, like the Kinks) has always had a rather negative effect on me. Here Comes the Sun by the Beatles, for instance, usually means some horrible shit’s about to happen.	The Music That You are Listening to is Impacting Your Mental Health View Post 25	2015/10/25 at 7:00 pm

| Koufeto In reply to Adam Selene. It's as you said: 1) Get dumped by a girl 2) Listen to fitting music 3) Emotions get prolonged. My friend is heartbroken for the last months and when he listens to fitting music for him I feel absolutely nothing because I cannot even relate to the lyrics. In fact, I try to cheer him up by pretending to be the goofy singer or w/e comes in my head at that moment. But I'm far from feeling sad or heartbroken by being exposed to his moody music for at least 5 hours a day, 5 days a week. | Adam Selene "After their data was analysed researchers found out that people who usually listened to sad or aggressive music were more anxious and neurotic. This particularly stood out in the male portion of the study participants. The researchers came to the conclusion that listening to negative music results in the expression of these negative feelings," It's not 100% clear from these words whether the researchers came to the conclusion that listening to "negative" music causes negative feelings. If they did, then the article should explain how the researchers decided that music causes negative feelings, and not that people with negative feelings are drawn to listen to negative music, possibly as a catharsis for their negative feelings. It is possible I suppose that consuming negative media traps people in a cycle of negativity. But I'd want to see some more comprehensive evidence before I came to that conclusion. As worded, this sounds worryingly close to "want to stop feeling depressed? Make the choice to stop feeling depressed!" Don't worry, be happy! <input type="checkbox"/>  Funcuz twittyswister@live.ca 172.94.90.67	In reply to Anders. No, you're making assumptions that are based on rhetoric. Very few women abuse the system...but how does anybody know that ? Women do it all the time via restraining orders, accusations of domestic violence to gain an upper hand in divorce and custody proceedings, groundless sexual harassment claims, etc. So why would it seem reasonable to assume that women don't abuse the system where sexual assault is concerned ? Of course they do and they do it just as often as they do with any other class of crime. The error here is assuming that only a tiny fraction of women filing claims of rape are lying. Nobody knows how many because most claims don't make it to a court of law in the first place. Often enough it's because the story unravels pretty quickly. Other times it's because those same women weren't actually raped but were later convinced that they somehow were. This latter scenario is most often heard about on college campuses where feminists have free reign to indoctrinate at their leisure. In any case, making any claims about the incidence rate is just as inaccurate as any claim about the number of rapes that go unreported. Both claims are based on nothing more than speculation and anybody who reads the "research" will immediately notice that there are actually very few confirmed facts. Only 1 in 10 are reported ? How do we know ? Because some people assume it must be true as it "feels" right to them. Only %2 of claims of rape are demonstrably false ? According to a line in a book where the author literally just pulled the figure out of her ass. Completely baseless but it'll be milked until too many people call it out for being the B.S. that it is.	Lisa Longstaff Can't Stop Lying About Rape View Post	2015/10/23 at 3:30 pm

That junk science is the very enemy of understanding. Women actually rape men more than men rape women. Plenty of evidence of that and more always coming. Opportunity making the thief is such a comical phrase in this instance. It is fully possible to convict in such a situation, but it is not easy. Assuming that we then only have 6 real rapes is silly. We simply do not know. And sometimes, not very much but still too often, we also convict innocent men.	Lisa Longstaff Can't Stop Lying About Rape View Post	2015/10/23 at 8:59 am
<input type="checkbox"/>  Anders landjo@gmail.com 78.41.129.7	In reply to disqus_QL05BqU79X. Deducing from the unfortunate prevalence of false rape accusations that "women lie about rape" is one of the reasons why MRA and similar movements so easily garner slander for misogyny. It is far from factually true. Divide the number of false accusations, even by the upper range of estimates of around 50%, with the number of sexually active women, and you will have a fraction of a percentage point. The truth is: very few women abuse the system set up to protect them (much less then men commit rape, which is arguably a comparable abuse of men's biological advantage). But some do, and that is a problem. The opportunity makes the thief.	Lisa Longstaff Can't Stop Lying About Rape View Post	2015/10/23 at 8:56 am

 Michelle Perkins	Makes one take a new look how alternative sugars, especially High Fructose Corn Syrup (HFCS) has impacted the rate of cancer, diabetes, child and adult obesity rates, etc., in the population. Food manufacturers in the United States began using this as a means of cutting costs, since it costs so much less than regular sugars, such as those derived from sugar beets or cane. Much research has been conducted to prove that HFCS greatly lengthens shelf life of baked goods, has a sweetening effect that is significantly higher than regular sugars, thus costs much less. Being in the nutrition field, I have been watching this for some time and have been amazed at the power of money when it comes to the manipulation of our food supply that has nothing to do with health and everything to do with profitability. JayRaskin jayraskin@gmail.com 71.47.12.151	Good article, Alexander. I agree that the accusers are all fabricating tales for a number of different, sometimes overlapping reasons including political, economic, psychological and social ones. However, the accusers are at the same time being used by other forces to advance their own agendas. The mass media have consistently broken the most fundamental rules of journalism to prejudice the public. They constantly repeat the absurd charges and never bother to investigate the facts, and fail to notice how the stories change significantly with each telling. The legal system has allowed the most absurd and crazy lawsuits for defamation to proceed. Who has ever heard of suing a man because his lawyer claims he is innocent? We are talking about a systematic and catastrophic failure in multiple elements in American and apparently British Society.	The Media Lynching Of Bill Cosby View Post	2015/10/18 at 3:32 am foodandart	Not a surprise. As a housepainter, over the years, I have been in homes with new furnishings and carpets – and the stink, a variation on the ‘new car’ smell would permeate my clothes and skin for hours afterwards. Was instrumental in my decision, nearly 20 years ago to remove all the synthetic-based furnishings and carpets from my home. (let’s not even get into the plastics that food was stored in – eventually nuts and bolts were put in the Tupperware until it dried and cracked and it’s all gone now) Yes, the ancient 1930’s mohair living-room set is worn, yes the cotton throw rugs are not as comfy as the wall to wall.. but the peace of mind that comes of NOT having a home filled with [surprise! I was correct!] outgassing plastics is turning out to be well thought out. Get rid of as much synthetics in your life and home as you can. It’s toxic, and just a matter of time before the science finds out just how much it all is.	Air Pollutants Get Into the Body via the Skin View Post 8	2015/10/18 at 2:28 am

This still does not cover even a small portion of the ugly truth. To be frank, women have been lying about rape since humans could talk because it’s always been considered THE most serious crime (over and above murder and treason), piques human horror (in men more than women, perhaps) and is the swiftest weapon to bear against a man, or absolve one’s guilt over something. The easier it is to claim rape and be believed, the higher the rate of false claims. States that pay women to lie (India) see incredibly high rates, those with agonistic justice systems (China) see almost nothing. The UK is somewhere just under India, I suspect.	Lisa Longstaff Can’t Stop Lying About Rape View Post 31	2015/10/14 at 11:51 am

NWOslave havocthe1st@comcast.net 174.60.14.164	"Yes, the conviction rate for rape may be "only" 6%, which means the CPS is bringing far too many weak cases." Why the apparent angst that only 6% of these cases end in conviction? Isn't that good news? If a 100 cases are brought to trial and 6 are convicted, that means there would be only 6 rapes instead of 100, which seems much better than 100. Anders landjo@gmail.com 93.29.174.178	In reply to Paul. Actually there are many false convictions as well. Most exonerations concern sexual assault, particularly with child victims. The pressure to convict is enormous. The incentives are misaligned: a judge who fails to convict a rapist risks being held responsible for further assaults by ideologues and the media looking for a story that pushes our emotional buttons. Convict someone in a he said she said case with no physical evidence, and you are taking a brave stance in support of victims.  dandlco	Ridiculous! This is just more reefer madness propaganda. Cannabis/marijuana is probably the most studied drug ever. 20,000 studies the last 5-10 years alone. Drinking or eating too much of anything can be fatal. Back in the early 1990s while researching something entirely different I stumble on a case of a man who had died because he had been drinking water literally all day. I didn't keep the citation unfortunately but I think it was in the "Leicester Mercury" or possibly a Birmingham newspaper. I believe the fatal dose of water is around 8 pints in half an hour. I don't suppose she has considered simply giving it up? No, I thought not.

While this is a promising therapeutic avenue, it should be noted that it is not the first drug that shows promise in reversing the symptoms of Rett Syndrome. These findings do not prove a direct link between sugary drinks and type 2 diabetes, as this research does not represent clinical trials. With that said, our industry is doing its part to contribute to meaningful solutions to public health challenges. For example, our member companies launched the Balance Calories Initiative with the goal of reducing beverage calories in the America diet by 20 percent by 2025. We are also helping people manage their calorie and sugar intake by providing a wide range of beverage options, a variety of package sizes and clear, easy-to-read information to help them make the choice that's right for them. In sum, overall diet and activity matters when it comes to preventing and mitigating health issues – and our industry is working to help promote this message.

Asg

"For those looking smug drinking your diet versions of the popular fizzy drinks, you should note that artificially sweetened drinks and fruit juice also showed a positive association with type 2 diabetes; however, this was to a lower level."

This is a half-truth, and deceptive. The research article noted that though there was a positive association between artificially sweetened drinks, fruit juice and type 2 diabetes the articles studied in the meta-analysis contained bias and did not adjust for other factors like the fact that obese individuals, of which are at higher risk of type 2 diabetes, tend to drink more of both sugary drinks and artificially sweetened ones.

You should know better. The initial tone of your article was a factual one, and fitting that point against artificially sweetened drinks right after something with hard evidence gave more credence to the point than it actually has, on top of not attributing the cause of the positive association as noted in the paper. The laymen reading your article will not go digging for the truth in a research paper that is buried in another article that is linked from your article.

 Horhe	If I can just throw an idea out there – it is a lie or an expression of personal ignorance for someone to claim that 5.000 people are an unprecedented issue. 700 agents in the US in the 1950s deported over one million illegal Mexican immigrants over the course of 6 months. If these "refugees" are more likely to be male, armed, violent or aided by traitorous elements in European societies, including their co-ethnics, this is an even stronger reason to act now and act decisively. This is what you have militaries, guns and budgets for. We keep arguing over the moral of intervention in Iraq and God knows where when the single most moral reason to apply force of arms is standing under our noses – securing the borders. We can not only expel these "refugees" and every criminal migrant, but also ten or a hundred times their number. This is what tactics are for – you get them in the Med or at the land borders of the EU. What is lacking is spine! How can we allow our sovereignty and our borders to be trampled by people who are invaders in all but names? Why is this breach of the UN Convention on refugees not being prosecuted aggressively? What is even the worth of the Convention anymore, when Africa is a perennial basket case which will always meet the criteria of violence that Europeans set for their post-WW2 situation management? Why are the soldiers still in the barracks? Why are people still debating whether to deploy ships in the Med? Why are those ships not being sunk or rerouted back to North Africa? Why are the land borders in the Schengen area not being reactivated for this emergency situation, which is a perfectly legal response? The people responsible for this are either idiots or traitors.	Worst Ever Migrant Crisis as 10 Million British Holidaymakers Head for Calais View Post 1	2015/07/17 at 3:53 pm

Ok so no one has to buy Jay's opinions we all have our own, Can you explain away the discrepancies of even a few of the alleged accusers.

For example: explain the many versions of Janice Dickinson gives of her alleged rape.

Explain a total fabrication or false memories if you prefer of Joan Tarshis for a performance that did not exist at the Westbury Fall Festival.

Explain the Louisa Motiz seeing Cosby on the Tonight Show when the Schedule contradicts her every word.

Feel free to prove any one of the accusers are legit.....

But tell me, a Survivor , Why Allred would represent those with the backgrounds and contradictions by their own statements as though they are victims.

It is a disgrace to every real victim of rape to see what Allred is doing, it is not in the interest of a survivors mental health, it is not honest and it does nothing to protect others in our society of the vile crime of rape by a smearing campaign over investigations and education!

The hemorrhagic form is apparently triggered by subsequent infection with a different serotype. Cross-reactive antibodies from the former serotype set off a cytokine storm in the lungs which can be fatal. Interestingly, the antibiotic doxycycline has been found to be protective in these cases, and not through any effect on the virus (obviously) or secondary bacterial infections. There is a direct effect on the cytokine response, attenuating it to the point that it can be endured by the patient.

Astounding that some people are attempting to navigate around U.S. laws to justify prosecuting Bill Cosby. This due to the absence of facts and proof. They are cutting off their noses to spite their faces. The laws that protect Bill Cosby protects us all. Absent legal protections, we would have a very dangerous society where unscrupulous individuals can have innocent people imprisoned at will.

It is easy to falsely accuse men of rape because there exists a powerful cult-like movement that believes anyone who alleges to be a sexual assault victim.

The danger is that women are being told in advance that all they need to do is accuse a man of rape, and they will be believed. The man's reputation and life will be destroyed just based on the accusation. Anytime the door is opened for people to harm others, some will take advantage of it.

Nat Burns This is terrible science. Nothing is indicated here. Why are people still defending the dogma of fat is bad when we know it isn't. Sugar is the culprit, we have so much evidence that carbohydrates cause decline in cognitive ability, not fats. In fact fats improve brain function when you lower the carbohydrates. AnonTheMouse In reply to Rick Leonardi. The problem is that, in this case, the data is inconclusive at best. The study being used to produce these findings apparently fails to differentiate cause and effect, making its findings largely useless. They determined that mice with a diet higher in fats and sugars tend to perform worse (nebulous terms) in mazes. From this, they conclude that the mice must have lowered cognitive ability. However, lack of intelligence isn't the only reason we would expect to see reduced performance. For instance, two other possibilities immediately spring to my mind. Given that running mazes is a physical activity, and the test mice are being given a high-fat diet, they could simply be overweight, lethargic, and/or out of shape. Alternatively, it is important to remember that the mice are not volunteers, but are being lured to seek out the centre of the maze. Given that the most commonly used lure is the scent of food, it's not unreasonable to expect that mice with a higher-calorie diet would find this to be less of a motivator than those with a leaner one, and thus seek it out with less urgency. So, without more data, with less room for error, we simply can't draw a useful conclusion. Excess Fat And Sugar Can Lead To Cognitive Decline View Post 23
AnonTheMouse In reply to Gabriel John. Thank you. This was my thought as well. Given that it is impossible to communicate with the mice to find out why they perform worse, the entire test is really only based on their ability and willingness to perform a physical activity. At the very least, without more data, we cannot rule out the far more likely possibility that a fatty diet had no direct effect on intelligence, but simply made the mice lethargic and fat. 	Jasper	Interesting article, however, I believe there is a mistake "Mars is the fourth planet from the Sun and millions of years ago, when the Sun was warmer, conditions on the planet would have been very different." The sun's temperature had little to do with Martian surface temperatures; rather it is solar flux/irradiance (i.e. how much energy, light, etc is being produced by the sun and thus reaching mars) that is more important. That and the atmosphere of the planet. Mars, it's proposed, had a thicker atmosphere and thus was able to have a significant greenhouse effect to hold onto heat. The sun has actually increased energy output (gotten brighter) over time, but Mars has lost most of it's atmosphere, resulting in loss atmospheric heat and decrease in surface temperature. Finally, I think this temperature change is on the scale of billions of years ago, not millions. Mars probably wasn't much different from today a mere few millions of years ago. Any thoughts?  MoonSnack	Unfortunately, this isn't conclusive as far as what is truly killing off the honey bee population across the world. We'll need some more investigative study to determine what the honey bee's true killer is. Perhaps it's this parasite, or maybe it's the pesticides sprayed by farmers. As far as I know, those are the two biggest culprits.	Parasites Are Wiping Out Entire Honeybee Colonies. Threat Magnitude Much Higher Than Previously Expected View Post	2015/05/29 at 6:53 pm

<input type="checkbox"/>	 Alexander Baron a_baron@btinternet.com 217.44.51.108	In reply to BelieveWomen. Thank you for your candid response. You seem to be under the impression that Raskin has anything to refute. The reality is that rape is a crime that leaves physical evidence and has done so long before you or I were born; the case of the Scottsboro Boys is one in point. All these women made their allegations long after there was any realistic possibility of physical evidence, conveniently. Statutes of limitations were implemented to prevent miscarriages of justice arising from these sort of baseless allegations. Unfortunately we do not have them in the UK, instead we have the inevitable miscarriages of justice that follow. Leaving aside the demonstrable fact that many of these women are simply liars, chancers, publicity whores, plain whores or mentally unbalanced, I offer this: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_RLvSGYxDIs the bunny effect; there is also the bandwagon effect. If Raskin or indeed the police were to refute every single one of these allegations, doubtless another 49 would materialise. Furthermore I do not agree with Raskin on every point, he believes this is a racially motivated conspiracy (for want of a better word). I on the other hand don't. Further furthermore, if toxic women like you had their way, no man would be safe from your delusions and lies, black or white, rich or poor, because any demented female could come forward 10, 20, 30+ years down the line, accuse any man of any offence without a shred of evidence, and be believed. As for my being a rape apologist, if you had read anything I have written about rape you wouldn't make that specious claim. Or perhaps you are so dishonest that you would.	Toxic Women Peddling Poisonous Ideas View Post 11	2015/05/25 at 7:46 pm

<input type="checkbox"/>	 BelieveWomen facebook.com/pa ges/We-Support-the-Survivors-of-Bi... brandybetts@sbcglobal.net 24.14.186.229	Alexander Baron’s overblown blog entries are so rife with inaccuracies they are in league with swiss cheese. There are countless lies and ignorant comments in his “writings” but this particular one caught my eye: “....so much so that a handful of skeptics, including Jay Raskin – who is an academic rather than an investigative journalist – have been able to carry out their own detailed investigations that have rebuffed most of the allegations against him....” Jay Raskin has written a “debunking” for only FIVE of the FORTY NINE women, and one of the entires for the women he slams (Kaya Thompson) was PERSONALLY rebutted by Kaya Thompson’s own mother – Raskin claimed Kaya Thompson bears an uncanny resemblance to Autumn Brown, suggesting they are related and therefore they must be in cahoots. Judy Thompson offered to show Raskin their documented family heritage showing there is no relation. Jay “thanked” Judy for her information in the comment section and then proceeded to LEAVE THE BLOG POST up on his website instead of taking his lumps and deleting the slander. He has been called upon to remove it three times now. The next step is to contact his employer (Valencia Community College – higher academia, indeed) to let them know that he is posting false information and slander on the internet. It is beyond disturbing how you rape apologists cluster together in your tiny little covens, patting one another on the back, whilst continuing to crow LIES and FABRICATIONS and SLANDER on no-name blogs, largely unchecked – while you hypocritically rant about the “western media” and it’s “lies”. Absolutely unbelievable. You people are an embarrassment to the world of true academia.	Toxic Women Peddling Poisonous Ideas View Post 11	2015/05/25 at 5:34 pm

The responsibility for these refugees lies with their native countries, not Europe. We have seen right here in America what uncontrolled immigration brings. Those seeking asylum , for the most part, are not European, White, Christian. They will never, ever fit into European society. Call me a bigot if you wish, but I notice these refugees do not settle into the communities of the wealthy and powerful. Europe is dealing with unemployment, health, economic, trade, budget issues. Unsolicited immigrants add to the problems. Whether Libya, Somalia, Algeria, or any other nation is unable to care for its own citizens, too damn bad. It's their issue, deal with it. One of the rapes he WAS convicted of was said by the alleging victim to have been performed in concert with Jimmy Savile. In what seems to illustrate the bewilderment of the juries in most of these cases, they declared that her story about Savile was false, yet still convicted Teret of his crime. Inexplicable reasoning. It may be of significance that Teret’s trial represents the maximum hours for a jury to be kept sitting. Rolf’s jury was kept sitting for 45 hrs; Teret’s was kept sitting for over 60. By way of contrast, in the less high-profile trial of Roy Harper the jury puzzled at their job for 13 hours seemingly getting not far other than to declare not guilty on charge after charge. Having failed to come to any firm conclusions after those 13 hours, the judge discharged them and invited the CPS to try again. This in itself seems to suggest a simple wearing-down process of a jury by the system has been employed where the legal establishment had a special axe to grind.	Happy Birthday, Rolf Harris View Post 2	2015/03/30 at 6:05 pm

 charliep	Interesting. I reside in my ninth decade and rarely sleep more than four hours a night. My Doctor tells me at my age that is enough and quite common in older people. I do get tired and lay down for an afternoon sleep , that rarely last even an hour. It doesn't seem to matter what time I go to bed at night; no matter what I am usually awake in about four hours. My Doctor prescribed some sleeping pills which put me to sleep rapidly , but I am wide awake in four hours. Now then I do not take my sleeping pill before going to bed, but if I am a wake at two o'clock in the morning and would like to get some more sleep, I take my sleeping pill which does put me to sleep which may last anywhere from two hours to four or five hours. Most of the time I just get up and start up my computer and drink several cups of coffee.. I have even resorted to taking a sleeping pills for an afternoon nap, which normally only last for a couple of hours at the most Ageing does not demand more sleep, but less. I always thought that it was the other way around as you got older you would require more sleep. It turns out to be just the opposite.	89 Year Old Turkish Man Hasn't Slept in 55 Years View Post 1	2015/03/18 at 2:19 am

<input type="checkbox"/>  janenlee jannsdesign@gmail.com 66.190.247.20	excellent article. Wish more people would consider what this means to themselves. So far, it's out there and only rich and famous appear hit (not true but that is the perception). Don't these people understand they truly could be next? You don't even have to be rich or famous. You could be old and withered and someone you knew in Jr. High could have a moment and remember that awkward pass you made. That pass is now considered sexual assault or abuse and caused severe damage to the girl. Anyone, could be next. This is on a roll. <input type="checkbox"/>	Harryagain harry130747@bti nternet.com 86.165.43.205	I am from the UK.. I think there’s a lot of truth in this article. The “gold diggers” appear like magic when someone perceived as rich is accused. And the media encourages it.	Gloria Allred Attacks The Statute Of Limitations View Post 8 ▼	2015/03/15 at 8:04 am
<input type="checkbox"/>	James Lenfers dlenfers@hotmail. com 75.81.52.193	Totally awesome article Alexander Baron. Perfect narrative and salient points. For what my meager opinion is worth, I highly commend this article. And I am somewhat jealous of your skill at writing, and a fully functional website. I am still trudging along on mine to get it to a reasonable level of professional quality before I put it out there. There article is great though, and I learned a bit about writing in the process of reading it also.	Gloria Allred Attacks The Statute Of Limitations View Post 8 ▼	2015/03/14 at 5:54 pm
